HOUDINI! "The Grim Game"

A Paramount Aircraft Picture

HOUDINI SUSTAINED INJURY IN MAKING "THE GRIM GAME"

Determined to Put Best Efforts Into Paramount-Aircraft Thriller

The tremendous energy and zeal with which Houdini, the famous handcuff king, entered upon the thrilling stunts laid out for him by the scenarist in his new Paramount-Aircraft picture, "The Grim Game," at the Tabb Theatre this week, Friday and Saturday, nearly proved his undoing. In a fierce battle in which Houdini fights with a quartet of burglar "extras" his wrist snapped in the midst of the action and, though the scene was finished, further work on the picture had to be postponed for several weeks for it was found that a large bone in his wrist had been broken clearly in two.

"The present generation can see me in person," said Houdini during the filming of "The Grim Game," "But I want my most thrilling feats perpetuated on the screen, so that people in later years can assure themselves that I actually did them. That's why I have saved the most sensational stunts I have ever done for this picture and have worked my head off to make them as successful as possible."

The result is probably the most thrilling "stunt picture" ever shown, into which an entertaining mystery story has been worked by Arthur B. Reeve, of "Craig Kennedy" fame, and John W. Gray. Ann Forrest heads a notable supporting cast, including Thomas Jefferson and Tully Marshall. Irvin Willat was the director.

THE CLEVELAND MEETING OF SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS

School superintendents and all teachers from all parts of the country have found Cleveland the center of interest throughout the week of February 23-28, the occasion being the annual convention of the Department of Superintendents of the National Educational Association. This convention, which was attended by Prof. W. O. Hopper, of this city, was a clearing house of ideas for school teachers of the country, more than eight thousand of them assembling for an interchange of views. Realizing the splendid program of the juniors and its adaptability to school work, the N. E. A. devoted two periods to discussion of Junior Red Cross in the Schools. The peace-time program of the Red Cross provides a large place for the children of America. Its theory is that the ideals of Red Cross service find the quickest response in youngsters. Bringing cheer to unfortunate children at home, putting into practice plans for mutual help, participating in local activities that teach citizenship and studying the wants of children in war-torn countries of Europe are all made part of the objective of the Junior Red Cross, whose mission is to bring happiness to little children the world over.

Dr. Livingston Farrand, chairman of the Central Committee of the American Red Cross, came on from Washington to discuss "The Work of the Red Cross in the Schools." Superintendent E. U. Graff, head of the Indianapolis schools, outlined junior work in the city school. Miss Annie Webb Blanton, State superintendent of the Texas schools, and the first woman to be elected to so important an office, in a Southern State, presented the scope of junior work in the rural schools. Dr. John H. Finley, Commissioner of Education of New York, one of the country's noted educators, created enthusiasm in an address to all sections of the Association delivered Tuesday, when he appealed for a wider opportunity for child initiative seeking an outlet in genuine service for others.

Although it has been but little more than two years since the Junior Red Cross was organized, it represents a membership of approximately fourteen million children in nearly 83,000 schools throughout the United States. More than half a million Ohio children in the city and rural schools are participating in the work of this organization which has turned from the production of splints, canes and hospital equipment of war times to the production of toys for distribution among needy children at home as well as to the hundreds of little tots in Europe who have actually forgotten how to play or who have never learned because of the sorrows of war. Manual training schools in all states of the Union are manufacturing tables and chairs which are being sent to France, Belgium and Italy for poverty stricken families seeking again to set up their homes. The children of America are aiding in the maintenance of school canteens which dot Belgium from border to border, where was once the front line of the trenches which held back the German hords. In Italy, France and the Balkans they are supporting colonies of refugee children, cared for in the schools and institutions devoted especially to this need.

Although gaining and understanding of international fellowship with all the children of the world, the first concern of the Junior Red Cross is the immediate local activities which appeal so strongly to the children of each community. It is a work which fits in with the modern theories of education and the teachers of the country have turned to it as a great source of help and inspiration in their
